A PORTRAIT OF DURHAM

Philip Nixon

The City of Durham needs little introduction for it is among the principal historic cities of England, a position it has held for centuries and which is reflected in its fine architecture and particularly in its magnificent castle and cathedral.

Philip Nixon, award-winning photographer, was asked to produce this book for Halsgrove's unique Portrait Series because he knows the city so well. His photographs show not only the major sights and scenes but also the often forgotten corners and details of history, life and architecture that go to make up every great city.

Along with other books in the Halsgrove Portrait Series, this book provides over 150 stunning images of the city, celebrating all that is fine about the place. As a souvenir of a visit, or as a keepsake for those who live and work in Durham, this book will long be treasured.

Philip Nixon is an award-winning professional photographer of vast experience who had been commissioned by companies and organisations all over England. He runs his own photographic library and his work has been published world-wide in countless magazines, news-papers, calendars and books. He teaches photography and also runs popular photographic workshops in the north of England and the Scottish Borders. Philip also photographs, writes and produces multi-media presentations which are always in great demand and which he presents all over the country.

His many awards include those for wedding, pictorial, press and PR photography and multi-media work. He is an associate member of the Royal Photographic Society, a licentiate member of the Master Photographers' Association and holds a Diploma in Photographic Practice.
