OXFORDSHIRE: THE GLORIOUS COUNTY

Graham Uney

Oxfordshire. One thousand square miles of vividly divergent scenery. Here in the depths of Middle England, the mighty River Thames has cut broad swathes through this rolling countryside, encouraging man to clear forests, and to build villages and farms since times long gone. It's a county of contrasts. Oxfordshire is a county of wild sweeps of grassy heathland on the northern edges of the North Wessex Downs, and a county of ancient wildwoods from the eastern fringes of the Cotswolds. It's also a county of fabulous architecture, from lovely villages of thatched cottages and flint-walled farms to the mighty buildings of Oxford itself.

Through a superb collection of full-colour images, this book will lead you on a wonderful photographic journey. A journey through Oxfordshire, the Glorious County.

Graham Uney has spent a lifetime exploring all corners of Britain, as well as further afield. His photographic and writing work has appeared in countless magazines and newspapers, as well as in a handful of books and tourism brochures. Aside from working as a writer and photographer, Graham also works as a mountain walking guide. The Chiltern Hills separate Graham from Oxfordshire, as he lives in North Hertfordshire, and the drive through these beech-wooded folds is always a pleasure.
