HALSGROVE RAILWAY SERIES

ROMNEY HYTHE & DYMCHURCH RAILWAY

Andy Stansfield

For eighty years this narrow gauge railway has delighted countless thousands of young and old alike. Its eleven steam locomotives and two diesel engines ply the 13-mile length of track, carrying enthralled passengers between the Cinque Port town of Hythe and the shingle spit of Dungeness with its fishermen's cottages and beach-based fishing fleet.

Based at New Romney where there are workshop facilities and an extensive model railway exhibition, the RHDR is largely dependent upon volunteer enthusiasts whose knowledge and experience they gladly share with the visiting public. A day out on this important part of our heritage is an experience to treasure.

In this departure from his usual style of scenic photography, Andy Stansfield sets out to capture not just images of these historic locomotives but also the background and the people who make this national institution the subject of so much fascination.

Andy Stansfield is a Lancashire-based photographer, feature writer and author who specialises in travel and outdoor leisure. He is the author of The Forest of Bowland and Pendle Hill, also published by Halsgrove.
