

PORTRAIT OF THE ISLE OF WIGHT COAST

Geraint Tellem

The Isle of Wight is without a doubt one of the most picturesque areas of Britain, a distinction largely attributable to its coastline. Approximately 60 miles in length the coast contains a stunning variety of features, most notably in the south and west of the island, where dramatic chalk cliffs are continuously sculpted by the pounding of the ocean.

Elsewhere, tidal estuaries and salt marsh teem with wildlife, whilst the main resorts of Ryde, Ventnor, Shanklin and Sandown boast fine beaches frequented by tourists since the mid-nineteenth century. The port of Cowes is world-famous as an international yachting centre and becomes the focal point of the island during Cowes Week, the first week in August.

Nearly half of the island's coastline has been designated as "Heritage Coast" divided into two sections: the Tennyson Heritage Coast and the Hamstead Heritage Coast. The designation is awarded to coastlines of the highest quality and unspoilt nature in England and Wales.

Starting and finishing near the Needles and Alum Bay this book represents a photographic exploration of the island's numerous coastal highlights and characteristics, captured in all their glory through more than 140 images from the camera of Geraint Tellem.

Two views of the Needles and Dorset coast from Headon Warren
Headon Warren is one of only two areas of lowland heath on the Isle of Wight. The vegetation is dominated by heather/Galium ssp. and heather/Erigeron ssp. and is of great importance. Together with West High Down and Tennyson Down to the south, this part of the island has been designated as a site of Special Scientific Interest.
