An Aerial Journey

Skyworks/Pixz

'Sussex by the Sea' is how this most famous part of England is popularly known and it is true that the presence of the sea has had an enormous impact on it from ancient times to the present day. The Romans came by sea to settle the area, and the most well-known sea-borne invasion in English history took place at Hastings in 1066 when William of Normandy defeated the native Harold and his Saxon armies, an event the Conqueror celebrated by building Battle Abbey. In the eighteenth century a new trend set in as sea-water bathing became fashionable and – with easy access from London – the stylish flocked to the Sussex coast. Brighton became easily the most famous resort, but with the coming of the railways others grew rapidly too: Bognor Regis, Littlehampton, Worthing, Eastbourne, Bexhill and Hastings are today amongst some of the most famous holiday haunts in Britain.

Inland, the pace of life was slower. Sussex has still very much a farmed and pastoral countryside. The Downs are perhaps its single most important feature, the rolling chalkland that extends for some 90km from Eastbourne to the Hampshire border which has become the first National Park in South East England.

Sussex can boast an impressive number of picturesque villages and small towns. Its climate and soils have made it particularly suitable for the creation of gardens which accompany the country houses for which Sussex is legendary. Almost everywhere you look there is a trace of its rich past in its thriving present, and – particularly when seen from above – an incomparable variety of wood and field, down and village, framed by one of the most renowned coastlines in the world.

SKY HIGH - SUSSEX

Right top to bottom: The Seven Sisters are among the most unspoiled coastal areas in Britain and certainly the most dramatic;

The Sussex Downs; Brighton.

The two piers – the West Pier on the right and Brighton Pier on the left.

Below: Example of a double-page spread.

Birling Gap offers the only access to the beach below the Seven Sisters cliffs.

At Birling Gap the receding cliffs threaten the houses and hotel.

Uppark was given to the National Trust in 1954 and was regarded as a jewel because of its carefully-preserved original decoration.

Bodiam's moat may have been as much for show as defence, but certainly gives it a 'fairytale' appearance.
